In California, lenders who intend to foreclose on a property when the loan is delinquent typically use the nonjudicial foreclosure process also known as a trustee's sale. This process is less expensive for the lender than the judicial foreclosure process. A nonjudicial foreclosure doesn't require a court proceeding and, thus, is a more expeditious process. From here on, whenever the term "foreclosure" is used, it is referring to a trustee's sale.

With foreclosures being so prevalent and with so many homeowners being at risk of losing their homes to foreclosure, REALTORS® need to be able to assess whether they have sufficient time to market the property and close escrow before the property is lost to foreclosure. Therefore, this article provides a foreclosure timeline to assist REALTORS® in their assessment of the time remaining before a possible foreclosure occurs.

Several recent laws have impacted the foreclosure timeline. The California legislature added an additional 90-day extension period after the recordation of the Notice of Default (NOD)—California Civil Code Sections 2923.52-2923.55. However, those statutes were repealed effective Jan. 1, 2011.

Another law which expires Jan. 1, 2013—California Civil Code Section 2923.5--affects the foreclosure timeline but only for loans made between Jan. 1, 2003 and Dec. 31, 2007 on residential one-to-four unit owner-occupied properties. This law adds a 30-day borrower contact period before the lender may record the NOD.

In the counting of days in the chart below, please consider that if the final day of performance falls on a Saturday, Sunday, or holiday, then the day for performance becomes the next business day. "Business days" are defined as all days other than Saturday, Sunday, and holidays. See California Civil Code Sections 7.1, 9, and 10 for more details.

FORECLOSURE TIMELINE FOR LENDERS

The lender must also give the borrower the toll-free number for finding a HUD-certified housing counseling agency. Note: In the 2010 case, Mabry v. Bottom Line: The minimum time for a trustee's sale foreclosure (nonjudicial foreclosure) is 110 days after the NOD is recorded for most loans (plus 30 days for loans made between Jan. 1, 2003 and Dec. 31, 2007 on owner-occupied residential one-to-four unit properties).
